TCU’s Experimental Psychologist

Faculty Thoughts: Mauricio R. Papini

I spent most of the spring semester in Spain, teaching, giving invited talks, and doing research with support from a Fulbright US Scholar Award (www.fulbright.org). “Fulbrighters”—recipients of a Fulbright award—invariably describe their feelings about the award as a “positive life-changing experience.” We are all part of a global community and experiencing it in some degree is an important component of academic life. Studying and working for some length of time in a foreign country is an excellent strategy to experience cultural diversity directly. And this puts things in perspective. One realizes that “we are the best of the world” applies to certain things, but “we need to learn how others do things” applies to others. It is a mind-broadening and humbling experience. If we are going to contribute to the emerging global community, with its fantastic opportunities and enormous challenges, we need to be testing ourselves in the tough arena of international cooperation. The Fulbright program offers great opportunities for students and faculty alike.

Publications

Conferences

Grants

Advisor’s Corner: David Weise (d.weise@tcu.edu)

If you weren’t able to enroll in Behavioral Research for the Fall 2015 semester, you’re in luck because we recently added another section.